An Overview of the Appeal Process

Once the Immigration Judge has made his or her decision, the party (you or the government attorney) who lost has the right to appeal the decision to the appellate division of the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR). This body is called the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA). The BIA is located in Falls Church, VA, and it is in charge of reviewing immigration judge decisions when one of the parties appeals from any of the immigration courts throughout the United States.

If you are ordered removed by the Immigration Judge, you can appeal that decision to the BIA. Once the judge has made the decision, you will have thirty (30) calendar days to send in your appeal. If you win your case and are granted relief, the government also has the right to appeal the decision within thirty (30) days.

If you appeal a decision of an immigration judge, you must convince the BIA that the immigration judge made an error of law or fact in your case and that if the error had not been made, you would have won your case. Errors could include anything from a judge's misunderstanding of the requirements for a form of relief or if something hurt your ability to present your case fully, such as an issue with the interpreter or if you were not allowed to testify fully (meaning, you didn't have the opportunity to tell your entire story).

This guide is designed to provide information on how appeals to the BIA work including filing the notice of appeal, writing a brief, and what to do after a decision. It includes information about how to appeal an immigration judge's decision in both removal hearings and bond hearings.

Reserving/Waiving the right to appeal

After your merits, or individual, hearing is complete, the immigration judge will give a decision by either reading the decision in the courtroom (an oral decision) or by sending you a written decision in the mail. If the judge gives his or her decision in the courtroom, he or she will ask the party who lost (you or the government attorney) if they would like to reserve or waive their right to appeal.

Reserving the right to appeal means that you are letting the immigration judge know that you may want to appeal the decision. Waiving the right to appeal means that you do not want to appeal the decision. In the case that you have been ordered removed and you waive your right to appeal, your removal order will become final.

If there is any chance that you will want to appeal, you should reserve appeal. At this point, the Judge may give you some information and some papers related to filing an appeal. Reserving appeal will start the clock on the thirty day time period to file your appeal. The day of the judge's decision is Day Zero (0) and the next day is Day One (1). If the judge does not issue a decision on your case on the day of the hearing, he or she will mail the decision to you. The date that is printed on the decision is the Day Zero (0) and the next day is Day One (1). Whether the judge gives you an oral decision or a written decision, you should have a copy of the judge's order with the date of the decision on it. This is the date that starts the clock.

If you waived your right to appeal at court, this is usually the end of your case and you will not be permitted to appeal. However, within the thirty day window after the date of the decision, if you decide that you want to appeal after all, you can send the notice of appeal to the BIA with an explanation of why you did not reserve appeal at court. This explanation may not be accepted, and your appeal may be rejected.

Things To Consider When Deciding Whether to Appeal

If the judge decides to order you removed and you think you might want to appeal that decision, there are several factors to consider when deciding whether to appeal. If you are detained, you will likely stay in detention while your appeal is pending, which could take several months.

You might also want to consider how strong your case is and whether you think you will be successful on appeal. An appeal must include your arguments as to what error of law or fact the judge made, so you should consider whether an error was made before you appeal. Some examples of errors could be:

- You had an interpreter for your hearing that you could not understand.
- The judge cut off your or one of your witness' testimony before it was finished.
- The ICE attorney asked you harassing or overly-aggressive questions.
- You submitted written evidence that was excluded (not considered at the hearing).
- You have a mental or medical issue that kept you from understanding fully what was going on at the hearing.

If the judge decides to grant you relief, then you probably will not want to appeal. However, if the judge grants you withholding of removal and you believe that you should have been granted asylum, you can appeal that decision. The government attorney may also appeal the decision of the immigration judge granting you relief.

While your appeal is pending with the BIA, your removal order will be stayed – meaning that while the BIA is deciding on your appeal, you won't be removed from the United States. However, if the BIA dismisses your appeal, the government can deport you unless you are granted a stay of removal by ICE or by the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals if you are appealing the BIA's decision.

Filing A Notice of Appeal

When you decide that you want to appeal, you will have to file a few forms with the BIA. These forms must be received by the BIA within thirty (30) days of the immigration judge's decision. It is a good idea to keep a copy of everything you submit to the BIA and to get proof of mailing to show the date you sent the forms. If possible, get a delivery receipt showing the date your forms were delivered to the BIA.

Check List of Forms to Send

- Form EOIR-26, Notice of Appeal from a Decision of an Immigration Judge – This is the actual appeal form. Instructions are provided, and you should read them carefully.

- Question 8 asks if you plan to file a written brief – which is your opportunity to write in more detail the reasons why you are appealing the immigration judge’s decision. If you check “Yes” and you do not file a brief, your appeal will likely be dismissed. If you decide that you want to file a brief, you will receive a copy of the record in your case including transcripts of the hearings, which you can use to write your brief. If you check “No” you should write all the reasons why you are appealing on a separate piece of paper and submit it with the Form EOIR-26.
 - If you are planning to file a brief, in Question 6, where it asks you to write your reasons for appeal, you should include a statement that reserves your right to raise other arguments in your brief. An example of such a statement is: “Respondent reserves the right to raise additional arguments upon receipt of transcript.”
- Filing fee of $110 or Form EOIR-26A, Fee Waiver Request – If you cannot pay the $110 filing fee, you will need to file a request to waive the fee, which is Form EOIR-26A. This form will ask for information about your finances.
 - Form EOIR-33/BIA, Alien’s Change of Address/Phone Number Form – If you are released from detention while your appeal is pending, you must inform the BIA of your new address within five working days. If you are detained and will not be released, you don’t have to complete this form.
 - Form EOIR-27, Notice of Entry of Appearance as Attorney or Representative Before the Board of Immigration Appeals – If you have an attorney representing you on appeal, they will need to file this form. If you are going to do your own appeal, you do not need this form.

Mailing Address

Your appeal must be received by the BIA by mail within thirty (30) days of the immigration judge’s decision. The BIA’s mailing address is:

Board of Immigration Appeals
 Clerk’s Office
 5107 Leesburg Pike, Suite 2000
 Falls Church, VA 22041

You must also mail a copy of your forms to the Assistant Chief Counsel of DHS – ICE, also known as the Office of the Principal Legal Advisor. A list of ICE offices is attached at Appendix A. You must serve the ICE office where your immigration case was held. For example, if you were ordered removed by the Denver Immigration Court, you will send a copy of the brief to the Denver ICE office. Some detention facilities have ICE offices just for those facilities. If you are detained at one of those facilities, you should serve the ICE office at your facility.

Filing an Appeal Brief

After the BIA receives your appeal forms and if you have indicated that you want to write a brief, the BIA will send you a package which will include a written-transcript of your hearing, including all the questions that were asked and answers that were given. You can use the transcript to look for specific information that supports your arguments. For example, you can look for direct quotes from the transcript that show that the immigration judge got a fact or an aspect of the law wrong or missed something important.

Tips for Writing Your Brief

When writing your brief, you should be sure of what your arguments are and work on organizing the facts and any legal arguments you are making in support of those arguments. The following things should be included in the brief:

A Statement of Fact

This section should describe the relevant facts of your case and the decision that the immigration judge made. If there are facts that are being disputed (meaning that you and the government attorney disagree on the facts of your case), this section should lay out which facts are in dispute. You should make sure to refer back to the transcript by using the page numbers (“Transcript at Page []”). You can also refer back to the immigration judge’s decision (“IJ Decision at Page []”). Your brief should not include new facts that were not part of the proceedings before the immigration judge (and therefore, not in the transcript).

Procedural History

This section should describe what has happened in the case before the appeal. When was the first hearing? When was the final hearing? Where were the hearings held? What was the immigration judge’s decision? Were there any previous appeals, motions to reopen, motions to reconsider, or any other motions filed in the case?

Statement of Issues

This is a list of issues that you would like the BIA to review. In other words, this section will lay out the specific legal or factual problems with the immigration judge’s decision. Usually, these arguments will center on whether or not the government can deport you and/or whether you are eligible for a form of relief from deportation.

Standard of Review

The BIA reviews issues of fact by an immigration judge under the “clearly erroneous” standard of review. This means that if you are raising an issue with the facts presented in the case, then the BIA will only overturn the judge’s decision if it was very clearly wrong. This is a very high standard. The BIA reviews issues of law, discretion, and judgement under the “de novo” standard of review. This means that if you are raising issues of the law or if you are raising an issue that the judge abused his or her discretion, the BIA can look at it with new eyes. This standard is not as high.

Argument

In this section you should list the mistakes that you believe the immigration judge made during the hearing. You should separate each of your arguments and provide the relevant law and facts that support your argument. For example, you could format each argument in the following way:

1. State the issue.
2. Say what the law about the issue is.
3. Apply the law to your situation.
4. Write a sentence stating your conclusion.

Conclusion

This is your opportunity to summarize your arguments and restate what you are asking for. For example, you may be asking the BIA to reverse the immigration judge's decision and grant your application for relief.

Briefing Deadlines¹

When the BIA sends the transcript, it will also send a schedule to submit your brief. Generally, a person with a BIA appeal will have twenty one (21) days to file a brief. You may request an extension of time by writing to the BIA. If you are seeking an extension, you must send it to the BIA BEFORE the deadline to submit your brief. You must also serve a copy of the request on the government.² An extension request should be clearly marked "BRIEFING EXTENSION REQUEST" and include the following:

1. The existing brief deadline;
2. The reason for requesting the extension;
3. A statement that you have tried to meet the existing deadline;
4. A statement that you will meet the revised deadline; and
5. Proof of Service on the other party (the government)

You will have to meet the original deadline until the BIA grants your extension request. If the BIA grants the extension, you will be given an additional twenty one (21) days. The BIA doesn't look favorably on extension requests and extensions are very rarely granted more than once.

If you do not file an extension request and you miss your deadline, you will have to file your brief with a motion to accept a late-filed brief. These are rarely accepted and can only be filed once. This motion must include the reasons why the brief is late and should be supported by affidavits or other supporting evidence.

Practical Issues³

- Page Limits – All briefs should have page numbers and the page limit for the brief is twenty five (25) pages. If you absolutely must submit a brief that is longer than twenty five pages, you will have to provide a motion to increase the page limit with the reasons why your argument requires more space.

³ Taken from Chapter 3.3, Documents, Filing with the Board, BIA Practice Manual, <https://www.justice.gov/eoir/page/file/1250701/download>

- Format – Briefs should be printed on standard size paper (8 ½” x 11”) in black or dark ink in a readable font (Times New Roman size 12 is recommended or printed neatly by hand). Text should be double spaced, and footnotes should be single spaced.
- Cover Page – The cover page should include your name, followed by “Respondent,” your address (or the facility address if you are detained), you’re a-number, the title (“Respondent’s Brief on Appeal”), and the type of proceeding (removal, bond, etc.)
- Signature – You must sign your brief at the end of the document
- A-Number – Your A-number should appear on the cover page of the brief and on the bottom right corner of every additional page.
- KEEP A COPY OF YOUR BRIEF AFTER YOU SUBMIT IT!

Checking the Status of The Appeal

To check whether the BIA has received or made a decision your appeal, you can call the EOIR Hotline 1-800-898-7180 (detention facility speed dial code 111#). The BIA may take longer in some cases to make decisions than in others, so there is no standard time for a BIA appeal to be completed. However, the BIA is supposed to make a decision within six months if you are detained.

What Happens After the Decision

The BIA can make any number of decisions on your case. The BIA may affirm the immigration judge’s decision (meaning the BIA is agreeing with the immigration judge), reverse the immigration judge’s decision (meaning the BIA is making the opposite decision from the immigration judge), or may remand the case for another hearing (meaning the BIA is sending the case back to the immigration judge).

If the BIA affirms the decision to remove you or if the BIA reverses the immigration judge’s grant of relief from removal, you have the right to appeal that decision to the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals. This appeal is called a Petition for Review. As with the immigration judge’s decision, you will have thirty (30) days from the date of the BIA’s decision to file a Petition for Review with the Circuit Court of Appeals. The state where the immigration judge made the initial decision will determine which circuit court will hear the appeal. In Appendix C you will find a list of the Circuit Courts of Appeal and which states belong to which circuit. ICE can remove you from the country while your Circuit Court of Appeals case is pending unless you request and are granted a stay of removal from that court.

If you are granted relief by the immigration judge, the government may appeal the decision. If they don’t appeal, and you are detained, you will likely be released after the appeal period has passed (thirty days). If they appeal and you are detained, it is likely that you will remain detained while the appeal is pending. However, you may request a new bond hearing from the judge because you have been granted relief.

Appealing a Bond Decision

Bond hearings are different from removal proceedings. Bond hearings are to determine if ICE should let you out of detention. Removal hearings are to assess the merits of your immigration case. Decisions on both types of proceedings can be appealed to the BIA.

In a bond hearing, the immigration judge may choose to grant you bond (an amount of money you can pay to be released from detention which can be returned to you after the conclusion of your removal proceedings) or can choose NOT to grant you a bond and you will remain in detention.

When deciding to give someone a bond, the immigration judge will look at several factors including your criminal history, whether you are a danger to society or whether you are a flight risk (meaning, whether the judge thinks you will come to court if you are released from detention). If the immigration judge denies you bond, he or she will ask if you want to appeal the decision. If you want to appeal, just like removal proceeding decisions, you should reserve appeal and you will have thirty days to send in paperwork.

With bond appeals, the BIA will send a written decision explaining the reasons why bond was denied or why bond was set at a specific amount. You will use this document to write your brief. You will not receive a transcript of the bond hearing. Just like a removal proceeding appeal, you will receive a briefing schedule and you will write a brief explaining why the immigration judge's decision was wrong. If you lose the bond appeal, you can file a petition challenging your detention with the local Federal District Court.
